

When the Recovery Act was passed in February, Congress put in place unprecedented transparency and accountability measures so that you can track how all the funds in the bill are being spent and by whom. All you have to do is go to recovery.gov to track how recovery funds are being spent. I believe that this oversight will help keep state and local governments and federal agencies careful and disciplined so that they will use this influx of funding to target smart investments that create and save jobs. To go to Recovery.gov, just click the above link or click here.